Dear Harold

I have moved, so here's my new address:

P.O. Box 4803
Memphis, Tenn. 38104

Nothing new to report.

I have a child custody case on the calendar for 9:30 a.m. June 10. Not that my practice is all that extensive, but it has picked up in the past few weeks. So if you come on that date, I can't make it to the airport. My matter in court will be lengthy and will probably not be heard, until the judge has disposed of that day's calendar. Being on Friday, there will be a lot of motions he will pass on, as Friday is motion day, in the civil courts.

Please get the return date as soon as possible. I have a very flexible schedule ~~for~~ for June, July, and probably August. I am most engaged in doing research and brief writing for appellate matters for two lawyers. Other than one Habeas Corpus client (his prison drafted brief almost sounded like JER), and three other cases, I have no courtroom work scheduled for the summer. So I know I can probably get with you on the return flight.

There's hasn't ~~many~~ been a lot said about MLK, Ray, or the investigation in past weeks, although the Committee investigators were in town a couple of weeks ago. Perhaps, it because I have been busy with other matters.

See last
It has been seven weeks since Doubleday took my manuscript. ^{is} There ~~is~~ supposed to be at least nine other persons at Doubleday to read it, and I am not sure whether the first one has yet. I think Lane's book has fostered the general impression that it is a comprehensive treatment of the case. In reality, it is only a ~~xxx~~ teaser. It is very superficial. I have read it, and although the part refuting most of McMillan's material is not bad, it is almost bare of anything new. If that is all Lane knows about the case it is fantastic.

then it is fantastic how he became a so-called national expert on the case.

Ironically enough, Jay Fred Friedman is now next door to the old RXT law ~~xxxx~~ firm. His address is Suite 402, First American Bank Building, 147 Jefferson Avenue, Memphis, Tenn. 38103.

Look forward to seeing you on return trip, or on first trip if you happen to re-schedule it for another day.
